

HAPPYCITY ON ENVIRONMENT

HappyCity defines natural elements that promote well-being to include trees, diverse vegetation, local biodiversity, water features, parks, natural playscapes, and community and school gardens. The integration of nature in our cities help to mitigate global warming, buffer noise, offer shade, reduce the effects of heat islands, filter groundwater, reduce stormwater runoff, and improves the functioning of water systems.

CONSERVATION & PRESERVATION EFFORTS

Environmental conservation and preservation efforts is viewed as setting aside natural resources to prevent damage caused by human or by certain human activities

ACCESS TO NATURE

Access to natural environments results in lower levels of mortality and illness, higher levels of outdoor physical activity, restoration from stress, greater social capital, all leading to a greater sense of well-being.

“SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, AND ENVIRONMENTAL WELL-BEING ARE INDIVISIBLE. TOGETHER THEY DEFINE GROSS GLOBAL HAPPINESS”
- BAN KI MOON, U.N. Secretary General

HAPPYCITY ON ENVIRONMENT

HappyCity defines natural elements that promote well-being to include trees, diverse vegetation, local biodiversity, water features, parks, natural playscapes, and community and school gardens. The integration of nature in our cities help to mitigate global warming, buffer noise, offer shade, reduce the effects of heat islands, filter groundwater, reduce stormwater runoff, and improves the functioning of water systems.

CONSERVATION & PRESERVATION EFFORTS

Environmental conservation and preservation efforts is viewed as setting aside natural resources to prevent damage caused by human or by certain human activities

ACCESS TO NATURE

Access to natural environments results in lower levels of mortality and illness, higher levels of outdoor physical activity, restoration from stress, greater social capital, all leading to a greater sense of well-being.

“SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, AND ENVIRONMENTAL WELL-BEING ARE INDIVISIBLE. TOGETHER THEY DEFINE GROSS GLOBAL HAPPINESS”
- BAN KI MOON, U.N. Secretary General